Previously known as Sanford Cove, Lovey's Farm is a secluded and private 92-acre estate woven into the rich history of Walnut Cove, North Carolina. Long before the town received its charter in 1889, this land was settled along the "Carolina Road," a vital stretch of the famed "Great Wagon Road" that carried settlers from Pennsylvania and Virginia as they traveled south in search of opportunity and fertile ground. During the Revolutionary War era, it was the most heavily traveled road in Colonial America. Many of those early pioneers chose to remain in the Yadkin River Basin, drawn to its productive farmland and gentle landscape. Walnut Cove soon grew into an essential hub for trade, community life, and medical services, first welcoming travelers in Nissen wagons and later in Model T Fords. Today, this north-central region of North Carolina still holds the beauty, calm, and pull that captivated its earliest settlers. The land is a blend of open, manicured fields, mature hardwoods, and three large stocked ponds that shimmer between rolling hills. Wildlife thrives here, with deer, wild turkey, and countless other species calling the property home.

The renovated farmhouse at 1260 Beaver Island Trail Road blends timeless country character with modern comfort. The home features bright, open living spaces with oak hardwood floors, updated Pella windows, and vaulted, beam-accented ceilings. The kitchen is a beautiful centerpiece with honed quartz countertops, Medallion cabinetry, floating shelves, and premium appliances, flowing naturally into the great room's cathedral ceiling, brick fireplace w/ woodstove, and French doors to the outdoors. The main-level primary suite offers sweeping farm views, private access to the screened porch, and a spa-style bathroom with floor-to-ceiling tile and quartz finishes. Upstairs, two guest bedrooms and a loft nook provide inviting additional space, while the basement adds flexibility for storage, hobbies, or expansion.

Beyond the home, two exceptional buildings include a large equipment building with covered porches and a recreational building with an attached greenhouse — offering abundant space for equipment, projects, and storage, complemented by a heated garage and attached carport. The 2024 Morton Buildings guest house adds a private retreat for guests or income use, with a cathedral ceiling living area, modern kitchen, and full porch overlooking the property. Thoughtfully designed and impeccably maintained, this estate provides a rare combination of natural beauty, functionality, and privacy.
